

06.1 Sentence Fragments

Sentence fragments are clauses that cannot stand on their own as complete thoughts, i.e., as a full sentence. These incomplete clauses are defined as sentences that lack either a subject (an actor) or a verb (an action). To fix a sentence fragment, identify which element the clause is missing for completion, and rephrase.

The following fragments lack a subject or actor.

1. Driving in Baltimore during rush hour.
2. Spent too much time playing online games.
3. Such as walking, running, and playing golf.

The fragments below lack a verb or action

1. John, Billy, and Francis.
2. The city council member in our district.
3. The daycare center coordinator.

A more complicated, but more common form of sentence fragment is what is called a dependent clause fragment. A dependent clause is a sentence that has a subject and verb, but cannot stand on its own as a complete sentence. This is usually because the clause begins with a preposition, a word that signals a logical relation between two ideas. A clause beginning with a preposition and containing only a single idea is dependent on another idea to be a complete sentence. The following fragments are dependent clause fragments. The red words are prepositions, which make the clauses dependent on an idea that is not present:

1. After Jason bought his anatomy textbook.
2. Since the party last night ended.
3. Before he was able to regain his status.
4. If you want to go to the party.
5. When the circus came to town.
6. Because he was angry at his best friend.

Identifying Fragments

In many cases, identifying fragments requires that you read each sentence in your piece very carefully, and to ensure that each sentence has a subject and a verb—an “actor” and and “action” that the actor executes.
